Ecologies of Diversities: The developmental and historical interarticulation of human mediational forms
The Aztec butterfly “papalotl”, symbolizes the many transformations and spatial movements of the self. Butterflies, like humans, metamorphosis into new beings through the processes of migrations across space, ecologies, languages, national and political borders; much like the theory and research celebrated by ISCAR.

La mariposa azteca “papalotl” simboliza las transformaciones y los movimientos del ser. Las mariposas, al igual que los seres humanos, se transforman por medio de múltiples metamórfosis que implican migraciones a través de diversos espacios, ecologías, idiomas, fronteras políticas y nacionales. De la misma forma en la que la teoría y la investigación promovida y celebrada por ISCAR, propicia la transformación y el cambio permanente en el individuo y la colectividad.

Organizing ideas

We are born, inhabit and create multiple worlds reflecting our biological, sociocultural, and interpersonal roots. We are both the subjects and objects of the ecologies that constitute our existence and conscious capacities as humans. As humans, we create and are created by our social and cultural institutions as well as our mundane representations of our everyday world of actions and experiences.
ISCAR 2008 is a celebration of this awareness and its potentials for understanding the human condition in today’s liquid modernity and for resolving the challenges we face in creating conditions for a peaceful and prosperous world—a world that is in balance with our needs for respect, dignity, and harmony within and across social identities, cultures, languages, and nations. It celebrates variations of opinion, the old and the new, and what’s to come.
