

HARVARD GRADUATE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

COGNITIVE DEVELOPMENT AND LEARNING

Harvard Graduate School of Education invites applications for one or more new faculty positions in Cognitive Development and Learning, with a rank of Assistant Professor, Associate Professor (untenured), or Professor, depending on qualifications. Areas of research expertise should include cognitive development and/or learning in early to middle childhood, adolescence, or across the lifespan. We especially welcome candidates with research interests in neuroscience and education, as well as those who study development and learning in a cross-cultural context.

Requirements include an excellent doctoral record in education, psychology or another relevant discipline, and a vibrant program of research. Successful candidates will be engaged in research that informs education policy and practice, and have a strong commitment to teaching and advising a diverse group of doctoral and master's students with a wide range of interests including programs in human development and in mind, brain and education.

The search committee will begin reviewing applications on December 1, 2010, and continue until the position is filled. Applicants should send (1) a copy of their curriculum vitae (including home address and preferred e-mail address), (2) a cover letter describing their research and teaching interests, and (3) three examples of their work or continuing projects. Applicants for assistant professor or associate professor positions should include four letters of recommendation. Candidates who proceed to a short list may be asked to submit additional letters or materials.

All applicants are encouraged to submit materials electronically as PDF files. Please contact cognitive_search@gse.harvard.edu to request instructions for submitting materials electronically. Please do not send application materials to this e-mail account. Alternatively, applications in hard copy may be sent to:
