

Assistant Professor in Developmental Psychology

The Department of Psychology at the University of California, Riverside is seeking an outstanding candidate for a tenure-track faculty position in Developmental Psychology to begin in July 1, 2013. The Ph.D. degree is required at the time of the appointment and applicants should have a significant record or promise of outstanding research. Salary will be commensurate with education and experience. Candidates should have an established program of independent research in the area of social development with a special focus on either (a) child risk stemming from poverty, or (b) health and well-being in childhood and adolescence. Further specialty within these areas is open and applicants who focus on emotional, cognitive, or biological aspects of development are welcome. Applicants should be committed to excellence in undergraduate and graduate education. Proficiency in quantitative methods so as to teach a graduate course in statistics would be particularly welcome. Review of completed applications will begin January 15, 2013 and will continue until the position is filled. Interested candidates should email electronic copies of their curriculum vitae, a cover letter addressed to Professor Mary Gauvain, Chair, Developmental Search Committee, explicit research and teaching statements, reprints and preprints if available to Psy2App@ucr.edu and arrange to have three signed letters of recommendation emailed to Psy2Rec@ucr.edu.

The Riverside campus of the University of California is growing rapidly, with numerous new and remodeled facilities and a new medical school that anticipates its first full entering class of medical students in August 2013. The campus boasts an excellent psychology department with a strong record of success in research, teaching, and extramural funding. For information on the Department of Psychology, see our web site at www.psych.ucr.edu. The campus, which is one of the most ethnically diverse in the nation, is located east of Los Angeles, north of San Diego, and an hour's drive from the area's mountains, deserts, and beaches.

The University of California, Riverside is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer.
