Lecturer in Developmental Psychology

The School of Psychology is inviting applications for a permanent (equivalent to tenured) appointment at the level of Lecturer (equivalent to USA Assistant Professor).

The successful applicant will possess a PhD in Developmental Psychology with a strong research and publication record in the area of Developmental Psychology. The successful applicant will actively conduct research in Developmental Psychology and participate in productive collaborations that complement our existing developmental expertise (e.g., theory-of-mind development, autobiographical memory development, gender and youth, positive youth development, and developmental psychopathology). Consideration will also be given to applicants whose research in Developmental Psychology complements the School’s strengths in other research areas. The successful applicant will demonstrate a proven ability to engage in teaching in a relevant field at University level. The appointee will be expected to direct and teach an undergraduate course in Lifespan Developmental Psychology, to provide teaching at postgraduate courses in his or her area of expertise, to supervise research students, and demonstrate a willingness to contribute to the administrative functioning of the School and the University.

The School of Psychology is home to a dynamic and international staff, and was ranked the top overall school or department of psychology in New Zealand in terms of research quality in the last two national quality assessment rounds. Further details may be found at: http://www.vuw.ac.nz/psyc/. For further information, please contact Dr Jason Low, School of Psychology, at: Jason.Low@vuw.ac.nz

Applications close 30 January 2015

Reference 366